1. At one time the Auspicious One lived among the Sumbhas, in a market town named Setaka. Then by which way [led to] the Auspicious One, by that way the venerable Udayi approached. Having approached the Auspicious One, having bowed down, he sat down to one side. Having sat down to one side, the venerable Udayi said this to the Auspicious One: It is marvellous, O Bhante. It is unprecedented, O Bhante, how profitable, O Bhante, my affection, reverence, sense of shame and fear of wrongdoing for the Auspicious One has been. Indeed O Bhante, formerly while being a householder, I did not profit by the Dhamma, did not profit by the Sangha. [It is profitable] that indeed I, O Bhante, considering my affection, reverence, sense of shame and fear of wrongdoing for the Auspicious One, went forth from the house [life] into homelessness; [profitable] that for me, the Auspicious One taught the Dhamma [thus]: “Such is form, such is form’s arising, such is form’s disappearance, such is feeling, such is feeling’s arising, such is feeling’s disappearance, such is perception, such is perception’s arising, such is perception’s disappearance, such are sankharas, such are sankharas’ arising, such are sankharas’ disappearance, such is consciousness, such is consciousness’s arising, such is consciousness’s disappearance;” [profitable] that indeed I, O Bhante, gone to an empty hut, setting in motion the restoration and inversion in these five stocks of appropriation, understood with higher knowledge as it has come to be: “This is
