

0.0.1 Gavampati

1. At one time, many elder bhikkhus were dwelling among the Cetis at Sahajati. At that time, many elder bhikkhus, after the meal, when they had gone back after alms gathering, having assembled at the round pavilion, this topic of conversation arose as they settled: “O friend, does he who sees suffering also see the arising of suffering, also see the cessation of suffering, also see the path leading to the cessation of suffering?”

2. When thus was said, the venerable Gavampati said this to the elder bhikkhus: “In the presence of the Auspicious One, O friends, this was heard by me and received in his presence. “O bhikkhus, he who sees suffering also sees the arising of suffering, also sees the cessation of suffering, also sees the path leading to the cessation of suffering. He who sees the arising of suffering also sees suffering, also sees the cessation of suffering, also sees the path leading to the cessation of suffering. He who sees the cessation of suffering also sees suffering, also sees the arising of suffering, also sees the path leading to the cessation of suffering. He who sees the path leading to the cessation of suffering also sees suffering, also sees the arising of suffering, also sees the cessation of suffering.””
