

0.0.1 Bhumija

0. At Savatthi.

1. Then in the evening time, the venerable Bhumija emerged from seclusion and visited with the venerable Sariputta. Upon arrival, he exchanged friendly greetings with the venerable Sariputta. Having exchanged friendly greetings and cordial talk, he sat down to one side. Having sat down to one side, the venerable Bhumija said this to the venerable Sariputta.

2. There are, O friend Sariputta, some samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by oneself. Yet there are, O friend Sariputta, some samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by another. Yet there are, O friend Sariputta, some samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by both oneself and another. Yet there are, O friend Sariputta, some samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by neither oneself nor another, but has arisen by chance.

3. “Here now, O friend Sariputta, what is the Auspicious One’s doctrine [on this]? What does he declare? How answering would we [say] just what has been said by the Auspicious One, and not misrepresent the Auspicious One with what is falsehood, and how should we answer in truth in accordance with the Dhamma, so that whoever is a Dhamma companion, will not arrive at a reason to blame these assertions?”

4. The Auspicious One, O friend, has said pleasure and pain are dependently arisen. In dependence on what? In dependence on contact. Speaking thus, you would [speak] just what has been said by the Auspicious One, and not misrepresent the Auspicious One with what is falsehood, and you would answer in truth in accordance with the Dhamma, so that whoever is a Dhamma companion, will not arrive at a reason to blame these assertions.

5. Therein, O friend, those samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by oneself, that too is due to contact. Those samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by another, that too is due to contact. Those samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by both oneself and another, that too is due to contact. Those samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by neither oneself nor another, but has arisen by chance, that too is due to contact.

6. Therein, O friend, those samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by oneself, “indeed, that they will experience apart from contact,” this possibility is not to be found. Therein those samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by another, “indeed, that they will experience apart from contact,” this possibility is not to be found. Therein those samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by both oneself and another, “indeed, that they will experience apart from contact,” this possibility is not to be found. Therein those samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by neither oneself nor another, but has arisen by chance, “indeed, that they will experience apart from contact,” this possibility is not to be found.

7. The venerable Ananda heard this friendly conversation between the venerable Sariputta and the venerable Bhumija. Then the venerable Ananda visited with the Auspicious One. Upon arrival, having bowed down, he sat down to one side. Having sat down to one side, the venerable Ananda informed the Auspicious One the extent of the friendly conversation between the venerable Sariputta and the venerable Bhumija.

8. Good, good, O Ananda. Rightly declaring, one would declare just as Sariputta. Pleasure and pain, O Ananda, have been said by me to be dependently arisen. In dependence on what? In dependence on contact. Sariputta thus, one would speak just what is said by me, and not misrepresent me with what is falsehood, and would answer in truth in accordance with the Dhamma, so that whoever is a Dhamma companion will not arrive at a reason to blame these assertions.

9. Therein, O Ananda, those samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by oneself, that too is due to contact. Those samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by another, that too is due to contact. Those samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by both oneself and another, that too is due to contact. Those samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by neither oneself nor another, but has arisen by chance, that too is due to contact.

10. Therein, O Ananda, those samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by oneself, “indeed, that they will experience apart from contact,” this possibility is not to be found. Therein those samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by another, “indeed, that they will experience apart from contact,” this possibility is not to be found. Therein those samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by both oneself and another, “indeed, that they will experience apart from contact,” this possibility is not to be found. Therein those samanas and brahmanas, proponents of kamma, who declare that suffering is made by neither oneself nor another, but has arisen by chance, “indeed, that they will experience apart from contact,” this possibility is not to be found.

11. Indeed when there is body, O Ananda, then with bodily intention as cause, there arises internal pleasure and pain. When there is speech, O Ananda, then with verbal intention as cause, there arises internal pleasure and pain. When there is mind, O Ananda, then with mental intention as cause, there arises internal pleasure and pain, only in dependence on ignorance.

12. Either one’s self, O Ananda, activates that bodily activity, conditioned by which there arises that internal pleasure and pain. Or else others, O Ananda, activate for one that bodily activity, conditioned by which there arises that internal pleasure and pain. Either with contemplation, O Ananda, one activates that bodily activity, conditioned by which there arises that internal pleasure and pain. Or else without contemplation, O Ananda, one activates that bodily activity, conditioned by which there arises that internal pleasure and pain.

13. Either one’s self, O Ananda, activates that verbal activity, conditioned by which there arises that internal pleasure and pain. Or else others, O Ananda, activate for one that verbal activity, conditioned by which there arises that internal pleasure and pain. Either with contemplation, O Ananda, one activates that verbal activity, conditioned by which there arises that internal pleasure and pain. Or else without contemplation, O Ananda, one activates that verbal activity, conditioned by which there arises that internal pleasure and pain.

14. Either one's self, O Ananda, activates that mental activity, conditioned by which there arises that internal pleasure and pain. Or else others, O Ananda, activate for one that mental activity, conditioned by which there arises that internal pleasure and pain. Either with contemplation, O Ananda, one activates that mental activity, conditioned by which there arises that internal pleasure and pain. Or else without contemplation, O Ananda, one activates that mental activity, conditioned by which there arises that internal pleasure and pain.

15. Immersion in ignorance, O Ananda, is the nature of these [activities]. But with the remainderless fading away and cessation of that very ignorance, O Ananda, there is not that body, conditioned by which there arises that internal pleasure and pain. There is not that speech, conditioned by which there arises that internal pleasure and pain. There is not that mind, conditioned by which there arises that internal pleasure and pain. There is not that field, there is not that ground, there is not that domain, there is not that location conditioned by which there arises that internal pleasure and pain.
