23. For me, O Brahmin, this occurred: “Why do I only dwell expecting fear. What if I in whatever way that fear and dread has come to be upon me, in just that way that as it has come to be, I would dispel that fear and dread. Of me, O Brahmin, when that fear and dread came while walking back and forth, then for just as long as [that fear and dread remained], I, O Brahmin, neither stood, nor sat down, nor laid down, for just that long I only walked back and forth until I dispelled that fear and dread. 25. For me, O Brahmin, unsluggish energy was aroused. Unmuddled mindfulness was established. My body was tranquil and at ease, my mind was unified and attained to samadhi. Quite secluded from sense-desires, O Brahmin, secluded from unwholesome dhammas, I entered upon and abided in the happiness and pleasure born of seclusion, connected with thinking and pondering, the first jhana. From the subsiding of thinking and pondering, with the internal tranquilization and unification of mind, without thinking and pondering, I entered upon and abided in the happiness and pleasure born of samadhi, the second jhana. With the fading away of happiness, I, dwelling mindful and contemplative, looked on

From the abandoning of [physical] pleasure and pain, from the extinction of former mental pleasure and mental pain, I entered upon and abided in the utter purity of mindfulness and equanimity without pain, without pleasure, the fourth jhana.

26. When my samadhi was thus purified, cleansed, unblemished, devoid of defilements, malleable, workable, steady, and attained to imperturbability, I directed it to knowledge of the recollection of past abodes. I recollected my manifold past abodes, that is, one birth,
